Move over, squiggles—there's a new free-spirited trend in town. After two years of being on our best behavior, we're turning to playful speckle motifs to invigorate a space with texture and whimsy. "Whether it's granule composites of post-consumer recycled rubber, scraps of marble used to create terrazzo, or ceramics and earthenware covered in glazed flecks, speckled markings bring a splash of color and a modernist touch to furniture and housewares galore," says designer Keita Turner.

Inspired, we asked Turner and designers Kellie Burke and Ashley DeLapp to share three of their favorite sprinkled pieces and how to use them in a room.

Snow Wallpaper by Hygge & West

“We used Hygge & West’s Snow wallpaper in a blue colorway to envelope the walls in a home office located on the top floor of a historic Brooklyn home. The textural speckled pattern is inspired by the allure of northern winters and delivers an ambiance of gently falling snowflakes to interior spaces. It evokes the nostalgia of sitting in front of the window as a kid, watching in awe the first snowfall of the season. We love how it emphasizes the dramatic angles of this home office under the eaves!”

Rubber CYL Side Table by Slash Objects

“The particles of post-consumer recycled rubber used to make these tables give them the speckled appearance of terrazzo. It’s a handcast concrete side table—which fuses together a recycled rubber exterior, a concrete table surface and a brass inlay detail to create a unique and durable piece.”

Postmodern Ceramic Teacup Set at 1stDibs

“We are smitten by this handcrafted, sculptural, ceramic vintage teacup set in a blue speckle pattern. The postmodern design of this rare signed set will add a bit of chicness to your next teatime.”
